Money Matters: Online banking gives seniors independence by: Bailey Miller

Many seniors are still making the trip to the bank to conduct financial business. That's understandable when there's much comfort standing face to face with the person counting your cash. However, there's another convenient option that's just as secure. "Online banking is more safe now than it has ever been," Kyle McNeese, Lubbock National Bank, Information Systems Vice President said.

He said logging in, instead of walking in, can give seniors independence with their finances. "It actually gives them the ability to do online banking, see their transactions, pay their bills, without depending on that care giver," McNeese said. Seniors need to keep their computers clean in order to not jeopardize financial safety. "Typically when we see an issue it's with the end user's computer. Something as far as a myware or a virus has compromised their machine."

Seniors don't need much to set up an account online. "Their home PC is what most people use. You can use a smart phone device for the mobile site, Android, iPhone, iPad," McNeese said. Utilizing that mobile device can make banking even more time-saving. "With mobile banking you can pay your bills, you can deposit checks and you can see your transactions. Most everything you can do on online you can do on the mobile site as well," McNeese said.
